

McCormick and Schmick's Seafood Restaurant
844 North Rush Street, Chicago, Illinois

Client: McCormick and Schmick Management Group
Architect: Larry Dean Hart
Role: General Contractor

Located at the corner of Rush and Chestnut Streets in the renovated Railroad Union Building, the 13,277 SF restaurant and lounge has an 8,777 SF ground floor and a 4,500 SF second floor.

The restaurant features a 350-seat, two-story dining room accented with hand-crafted mahogany millwork, stained glass and a grand staircase leading to the second floor.

Warm English racing-car green carpeting, Tiffany-style lamps and framed prints depict Chicago in its heyday.

Booths, known as "Snugs," for up to seven guests can be curtained off with luxurious velvet draperies for privacy. Several private dining rooms are available for special events such as weddings and meetings.

The interior was designed and constructed to provide an inviting and relaxed atmosphere. This restaurant has its own unique flair.

The second floor loft area overlooking the bar features live piano music. The atmosphere is reminiscent of an old fashioned way of dining.
